

Date: 28 February 2014

Country: Morocco, Rabat

As part of the efforts to discuss and explore the role of the National Press Council in Morocco, the Media Diversity Institute (MDI) in collaboration with The National Syndicate of the Moroccan Press, organized a roundtable on 28 February 2014 in Rabat. Media experts and stakeholders, as well as journalists and editors, debated the violation of the journalistic ethics and to what extent it affects the freedom of expression.

Some of the questions raised at MDI roundtable in Rabat were the responsibility of media, how that responsibility is shared with the civil society and what is the best way for the Moroccan National Press Council to implement and regulate the code of ethics.

Yones Megahed, the director of the National Syndicate of the Moroccan press, highlighted the strong relationship between the importance of respecting media ethics and standards, and the necessity of providing a healthy environment that caters for a professional practice and full respect of the media actor`s rights.
