

Date: 30 September 2014

Country: China, Guangzhou

Sun Yat-Sen University based in the capital of the most economically prosperous Chinese province, Guangdong , and the Media Diversity Institute (MDI) are to develop a joint Inclusive Journalism and Social Harmony Programme aimed at encouraging a culture and forum among the region's media actors, journalism educators and civil society organizations, that will build awareness and capacity for greater social and cultural inclusion through responsible reporting on the region's diversity.

The partnership agreement was made during a two day visit by a MDI representative to the flourishing university, known for owning the world's fastest supercomputer Tianhe-2 , worth almost half a million US dollars, as well as having the largest affiliated hospital system in China. Its is also the first university in China to establish a Civil Communication Research Center.

School of Communication and Design

Click here to view the information in this section Click here to view the information in this section