
Intern Needed for Media Diversity Research Centre (MDRC)

The Media Diversity Research Centre (MDRC) has opened applications for a research intern. MDRC focuses on innovative approaches to research at the intersection of diversity, inclusion, and public interest journalism.

The tasks for a volunteer intern would involve:

- Supporting MDRC research projects by conducting literature reviews, collecting and analysing data and preparing draft reports.
- Provide technical and IT support regarding recording equipment.
- Help with audio-visual aspects of recording and distribution of podcasts.
- Help promote aims and projects of the Research Centre through social media.
- Regular contact with the head of the Research Centre and advisors.

This current position is unpaid and offers a supportive learning environment and a flexible schedule. Whilst we cannot guarantee your volunteering will result in employment at MDI, many of our current employees have come to us in this way.

This position is also remote and any UK resident can apply. MDI does have a London office, as written in our website, where interns can meet the rest of the team.

It is open to current university students and recent graduates from a diverse range of backgrounds, and we actively encourage those from ethnic minority groups to apply.

Volunteering with MDI is an excellent opportunity to gain first-hand experience with a non-governmental organisation that works internationally at the intersection between media and diversity.

If you wish to apply, please complete the attached form and send your CV to Santiago@media-diveristy.org
